Principal's Message

To the editors of the Student's Pen:

This graduation issue of 1957 will be the last one to come from our present school. To those of us who have watched the Pen through the years, this evokes many fond memories.

We think of the hundreds of students who have toiled with pen and typewriter to make our school magazine a living memorial to their efforts. The poems, stories, pictures, and feature articles bring back to us the spirit of those pupils who, through their efforts, have left their imprint upon our past; who have helped to make our school what it is today; who have kindled in us all that "light of a kindred flame."

May we carry the torch with us and in our new surroundings cause it to burn with an ever brighter flame as a beacon with which to light our way in the search for truth and for knowledge.

Sincerely,
EMERY S. LOUD
Principal

Class OdeThe Sky and The Sea

*We are embarking on our voyage,
Across life's surging sea,
But lessons learned within these walls,
We'll hold in memory.
And in the lighthouse on the shore,
Gleams "the light of a kindred flame,"
To lead us, guide us, help us,
On our way to glowing fame.*

*Sailing off across the sea,
A part of its living stream to be,
To you, Old Sachem, we'll sadly say,
Our farewells on Graduation Day.*

*We'll soon be soaring on our flight,
Across life's spacious skies,
To heights of glory far beyond
Our wildest dreams, we'll rise.
But 'tween us and dear Old Sachem,
Lies a link of eternal love,
To safely bring our glorious plane,
Down from the skies above.*

*Soaring off on hopes so high,
Hopes up to the bright blue sky,
Holding in memory, while on our way,
This precious moment: Graduation Day.*

The Loveliest Day of The Year

It's the loveliest day of the year,
The sun is shining brightly;
The soft breezes murmur through the trees,
And they kiss the blossoms lightly.

It's the loveliest day of the year.
The air is still, and yet,
I hear sweet strains from heaven high,
As the sun begins to set.

It's the loveliest day of the year.
Whether skies are gray or blue.
If the sun should frown, it's lovely,
My love, when I'm with you.

It's the loveliest day of the year.
The air is crisp; the sky is blue.
The earth is covered with a patchwork quilt
Of leaves of every hue.

It's the loveliest day of the year.
The ground is a blanket of snow;
The winds have changed their voices now;
Like an angry god they blow.

The Hazards of Everyday Living

In my estimation, enemy agents are carrying on a subtle campaign to sabotage our nation. I base this statement on a detailed study of inanimate objects which must have been designed to frustrate us, shatter our nerves, destroy our will to resist, and create such a need for psychiatrists that any student scientifically inclined would find it more profitable to go into that field rather than atomic fission or electronics.

I believe our home makers are most afflicted. Take, for instance, the coupons found on food jars. Ever try to remove one? It is stuck so well to the bottle that the busy housewife finds it next to impossible to remove the coupon without ripping it. Consider also the box of soap powder which bears the directions, "To open, press here." After much pressing and pushing, the poor woman, in desperation, uses a carving knife to cut the top from the box.

Our businessmen, of course, are hampered also. Consider the frustrating situation of a bank check which is perforated just enough so that the corner rips and a new check has to be written out. I must mention envelopes, equipped with just enough glue so that the harassed businessman cannot be sure they will stay closed.

Homemakers and businessmen are not the only afflicted ones. None of us is immune. Take for instance, the advertisement which proclaims that $25 values may be obtained at the low price of $3.98. Of course, we never notice the tiny words, after the $3.98, which say "and up." You need not be a "do-it-yourself" addict to appreciate my next idea. That is, the item which bears the assurance, "So easy even a child can do it." It may be a piece of home-made furniture or a dress pattern, but you can be sure it would take an Einstein to decipher the directions.

In the face of all these dangerous influences, we must show emotional strength. Just a few pointers—don't get flustered, don't avoid these dangers, just treat them as you would a live time bomb, and above all, at the first sign of any emotional instability in you, see your psychiatrist. That is, if he is not too occupied with curing his own neuroses.

The Hut

I am tired—very tired. I have walked for a long time. It is raining. Large puddles form about my feet with each step I take. Thunder crashes, and lightning streaks across the sky, lighting the dismal land.

I see a hut. A light burns in the window. I must make haste. They will be here soon.

Silently, stealthily, I creep along holding my breath, not daring to breathe.

I hear voices. Bushes and branches crack. Hurry! They are coming.

My mind works in a set pattern now. I can't stand up, or they will see me, but I must get to the hut. I know what I must do. There, over by the road, I can see a ditch. I must reach it. Then maybe I can approach the house undetected. Time is running out. They are coming closer.

Inch by inch, I edge my way forward, my fingers digging into the wet earth. It is cold now, harder to travel. Little by little, I push my aching body along. But wait! They are closer. I stop. I mustn't move. "Be still!" I say to myself, "They can't discover you now. Not when you have gone so far. Be quiet. Be patient."

They are even closer now. Their voices are plainer. I can hear their heavy breathing. They are tired, too. Maybe they'll give up this wild hunt. But no, they, too, must reach the hut. But not before me! I must get there first.

Now is the time. I must run, while they are moving about. Slowly, quietly, I drag myself forward. I'm almost there. Time is running short. I must hurry.

Ah! I have reached the ditch. Now to run! My one last chance is to run.

They see me. Flashlights are turned on me. Run faster! It's my only chance.

The hut. It's closer now. The door is open. Sweating, panting, I run. But wait! I am falling. Oh no! Not now. Not when they are almost upon me. They call to me. I hear them running. Scrambling from the ditch, I run for the door. They are gaining. Closer they come. Closer is the hut. Will I be in time?

Finally I burst through the door. The light blinds me. I stagger. I must sit down. Must rest. I throw myself in a chair, close my eyes and wait for them.

They are here. I open my eyes, ready to meet them. This is the end. I am the first one back from the scavenger hunt.

A Lesson In Tolerance

On a pleasant Saturday in March, Kathy was in her usual position behind the soda fountain of Sandy's Snack Shack. The afternoon was sunny and warm, and business was good. Kathy's customers that day were all sorts of people, from the usual little fellows dressed as cowboys and spacemen and demanding "big ice cream cones," to the impatient business men, made even more impatient by the prospect of spending such a beautiful Saturday afternoon working. But among the customers that day, were three little boys, ranging in age from three to six. Like so many other little fellows that she had served, they wore cowboy hats and toted very dangerous looking six-shooters. Also like so many others, they wanted the biggest ice cream cones she could scoop. But some things about them were unusual. Under those cowboy hats there was shining, straight black hair, and out of their tiny brown faces shone the brightest, slanted black eyes that Kathy had ever seen. Their small healthy bodies bore all the characteristics of fat little Buddhas.

"How unusual to see children like that in this little town," thought Kathy. "But, beyond the differences which I do see, is there anything about them that is different from the hundred and one other children who have been in this store today? Certainly they love ice cream as well. Certainly cowboys hold the same fascination for them as for other American children, who are of French, Irish or Italian ancestry. Certainly they, as easily as any child may, could transport themselves into the fascinating world of make-believe, where they were the cowboy heroes, and each telephone pole was a tree behind which a dangerous robber might be hiding."

Kathy's thoughts raced on while her hands mechanically prepared sodas and sundaes. "There is the answer. There is no difference. The shape of the eyes, the color of the skin, the texture of the hair—all are as immaterial as the skin of an orange. For when the skin is peeled away, and the orange stands in all its golden lusciousness, then we see the true fruit and its true value is known. Likewise, if we look beyond the physical characteristics of a human being, we see the true man, the inner being. We find the same hopes, the same fears, the same ambitions in all races. Physical characteristics have no bearing on these human emotions. When we see the heart and mind, then we see the differences—the good and the bad. And these factors are found in all races and all peoples. No one race can be singled out as entirely good or entirely bad."

"So," thought Kathy as she left work that night, "Those three little boys, without ever knowing it, taught me a great lesson in tolerance."

Graduation Night

I could not believe it! It was all over. In my hand I clutched my diploma, and for a moment I was seized by the ridiculous idea that this was all I had to show for four years' hard work in high school. My eyes turned to the west, and the sight of the setting sun only illustrated my fears. The sun was already behind the horizon, and to me, it represented my high school years, which were now past. The red glow, now fading so quickly, became, in my mind, the memory of this graduation night, which in the coming years would also fade.

The tears came; I could hold them back no longer. Then I felt a light touch on my hand and knew that he was beside me. He saw my tears and spoke no word. Gently he led me away from the crowd. By his silence, I knew he understood; he did not have to speak. Slowly, silently, his presence comforted me. My tears ceased; I could think clearly again. Like a light coming on in a dark room, the thought came to me. The sun may set each night, but it rises again the next morning. One day ends, but another always begins. And the sun's journey across the sky each day is not without purpose. The rays which come to earth each day bring numerous benefits—energy, nourishment, growth. Now I knew that, although one part of my life had passed with the setting of this day's sun, another would begin with the rising of tomorrow's. And I also knew that my exposure to life had been and would be as beneficial as the earth's exposure to the sun. Whether I am busy with education, work, play, or leisure pastimes, the rays of knowledge which would come to me from my exposure to life would bring to me, as the sun to the earth, energy, nourishment, and growth.

This night's exercises were called Graduation or Commencement. But I shall always remember them as "Transition." It shall always be to me as the transitional phrase used between topics of a theme, between chapters of a book. Not a beginning, not an end, but a change. The transition from my life as a child and adolescent to my life as an adult.

Our Senior Year

Wednesday, September 5th, the class of '57 entered East Bridgewater High School—all set for a whoppin' good time. Perhaps some of us pushed the questions concerning our future out of our thoughts—for a while anyway. All we could think and talk about was how wonderful it felt to be a senior. But before we knew it, we found that plenty of work must be done and plans must be made before that much dreamed of Graduation Day would arrive. What profession should we wish to enter? What school should we attend? These and many other questions began appearing in our thoughts.

Soon there were books to be read, essays and themes to be written, physics and trigonometry problems to be worked out; all this as last preparation for the jump from high school to college.

Yes, there was much to be done before our graduation, but there was also a lot of fun to be had. The paper drives, the On-To-Washington booth, the trip to Washington, and the class play will give us many happy memories. The football, basketball, and baseball games; the band and Choraleers; our home room study periods and our teachers meant something special to us this year.

Yes, we've reached our graduation,
But next September I'm sure we'll agree,
That good old E. B. High
Was a wonderful place to be.

The Princess

She comes as a light princess, borne on the wings of the wind. At her gentle touch, a dewy-soft carpet of green is spread for her to walk upon. Green appears above her head also, and above that, a heavenly blue. Soon, her green world is interspersed with beautiful bursts of color, and it awakens to joyous bursts of song. Her smile brings good, nourishing light, and her tears fall as gentle raindrops upon a receptive earth. All the world rejoices at her coming; all its creatures praise her with song and sound. For she is the herald of new life, the prophet of good things to come. All creation loves her and awaits her coming. She is the princess of the world. She is Spring.

French Dilemma

When I walked into la classe de français,
 The teacher said, "Il faut penser."
 When she asked, "Quel âge avez-vous?"
 I answered, "Je vais bien, how are you?"
 When she said, "Conjuguez 'vendre.'"
 I began to, with le verbe "prendre."
 When she asked, "Pourquoi vous prenez français?"
 I had to admit it, I had mispelled anglais.

SYLVIA HASHEM '57

"A Thank You"

I thank you Father for all I receive,
 For all the guidance and truths I believe.
 I thank you Father for your generous deeds,
 For the love and respect which I have for all creeds.
 You have given me the faith that has helped me to see
 Just how lucky and happy a person can be.

A Friend

Someone special to you and me is
 Someone that you long to see.
 One who always helps you out,
 When times are bad and there is doubt.
 A boy who really understands,
 A girl who lends a helping hand.
 One who makes you feel real good,
 When once you thought that no one could.
 A person who is really great,
 And one who helps you as a running mate.
 One who talks some sense to you,
 Not like all the others do.
 One who'll stay until the end;
 This, then is a real true friend.

JACKOLYN SNOOKS '57

Interrogation of an Old House

Old house, old house, tell me true,
 Answer these questions I ask of you.
 How many travelers have you sheltered by night?
 How many mornings have you caught the sun's light?
 How many men have brought their brides to you?
 How many men have died within your walls too?
 How many footsteps of tots have you heard?
 How many times was there never a word?
 How many babies were born within your walls?
 How many parties have been held in your halls?
 How many glad times have passed in your view?
 How many sad times have you witnessed too?

Old house, old house, please do tell me,
 Of lives you've seen begin, then cease to be.
 Does mortal life seem so short to you,
 Since so many, many have passed in your view?
 Does mortal effort seem hopeless and lost,
 When you see a man on this sea of life tossed?
 Or do you feel that each life from birth,
 Leaves its mark on you and on all the earth?
 Does time ever erase what is done by a man?
 Do effects of each act show somewhere in the land?
 Old house, old house, tell me true,
 Can you answer these questions I ask of you?

Wood and Stream

The wind upon the pine trees,
 Makes them whisper soft.
 The brook rushes 'neath these,
 The moon rises aloft.

Ah! the air is cool and fresh,
 The water clean and calm.
 The ground is covered with sweet pine mesh,
 The night is as peaceful as a Psalm.

Ah! a splash I hear,
 To safety a beaver sinks.
 Then comes a cunning deer,
 Pausing cautiously to drink.

The woodland is a wonder,
 Only nature can reveal.
 You may stop to ponder,
 But this is how I feel.

I love the wood and stream,
 Its timid life and quietness.
 Nature explains just what I mean,
 No city strain or daily stress.
